For Fraud, Perjury...

Irvings, Suskind Indicted

NEW YORK, March 9 (UPI).
—Author Clifford Irving and his wife were indicted today by a federal grand jury on mail fraud charges, while they and a researcher were also indicted by a New York County grand tury on charges of grand larceny and perjury.

All the actions arose out of Mr. Irving's now officially dis-credited Howard Hughes "auto-

The federal panel's indictment said that Mr. Irring and researcher Richard Suskind's claimed interviews with the billionaire recluse were actually tape recorded interview sessions with each other, in which they alternately played the role of Hughes." It named Mr. Sus-kind as an unindicted co-con-

The indictment also said that the pair's sources for the book included a confidential reference file of Time Inc., the reference file of the Los Angeles Times. the Library of Congress, the Atomic Piercy Commission and the Defense Department, as well as books about Mr. Hughes by other authors.

It said a "substantial part of the research" was done in the

New York Public Library.

The two-rount federal indictment charged Mr. Irving and his blonde fourth wife, Edith, with mail fraud and conspiring to use the mails to defraud the McGraw-Fill publishing company.

25-count indictment handed up by the county panel charged Mr. Irving and Mr. Suskind with grand larceny, forgery and perjury in the second degree. Mrs. Irring. who admitted using the name "Relga R. Hughes" to cash $650,000 in checks from McGraw-Hill intended for Mr. Hughes, was charged with forgery and grand larcens.

According to the New York County Indictment, the defendants cambled that Mr. Hughes. who has not been seen in public for more than 10 years. was either dead or physically or control now and had just lifted a ban on alaughter of cattle and poultry and fish. However, Iraqis are not buying national products and line up daily in front of grocery stores to buy imported frozen or canned meat. The rush has produced a shortage of imported foods.

The source of the poisoning is believed to be a shipment of wheat seeds imported by the government a few months ago, reportedly from Canada, to keep the peasants supplied in the wake of a drought last summer that seriously affected crops.

The seeds had been treated with mercury, probably as a fungicide. A warning about the poisonous material was printed on every sack of the wheat with clear instructions that it was to be used only for planting, when it is not harmful.

Warning Ignored

However, the peasants apparently ignored the warning and used the seeds as fodder for their cattle and other animals. Because mercury has a delayed effect, the peasants, seeing that the animals did not appear to be affected, began to use the grain in making flour.

When the cattle showed symptoms of sickness, the travelers said, they were rushed to the slaughterhouse and sold for meat. The contamination prompted the government to ban all locally produced meats, while the slaughter of cattle, chicken and sheep was forbidden.

A special government commission, formed to investigate the situation, ordered all peasants in possession of the seeds to turn them over to the government. The Revolutionary Command Council, the highest executive authority, stepped in and issued a decree stipulating that those who deal in or sell the poisonous seeds were punishable by death.

Some of the farmers panicked and dumped the seeds into the Tigris, thus polluting the riverbed and the fish in the Tigris. The government promptly prohibited river fishing but later lifted the ban after investigation showed that the pollution had been

West German State Secretary Egon Bahr arrived in West Berlin from Bonn by air this morning and drove into East Berlin, Awaiting him was East Germany's state secretary, Michael Kohl, who had been on vacation for more than a month, causing a disruption in their talks.

The resumption was preceded by a West Berlin city government announcement that Bonn will pay all visa fees for West Berliners going into the East over Easter.

In an apparent attempt to influence the outcome of the May parliamentary vote in Bonn on treaty ratification, the East Germans granted their first seasonal passes in six years, over Easter and Pentecost.

For a one-day stay in the East, they will charge five marks (about $1.60) or three times that for a three-day stay, with an additional five-mark mandatory exchange for a one-day visit, 10 for two and 15 for three. Mr. Anderson testified today that eight of the men involved in the controversy have given false or conflicting statements about their parts in the matter.

Later in the hearing, Mr. Hume testified that Mrs. Beard told him that the president of the giant conglomerate ordered that the corporation defray part of the expenses of the Republican convention.

Mr. Hume, an investigative reporter, told the panel that, during one of two interviews he had with Mrs. Beard in February, she admitted that she met with Harold Geneen, the head of ITT, in San Diego last May before the settlement of the ITT case and that when told of the proposal to provide financial aid for the convention, Mr. Geneen said to her: "We'll underwrite it."

Dr. Victor L. Liszka, Mrs. Beard's personal physician, who this week testified that she was a heavy drinker and sometimes given to making irrational statements, has done referral work for an ITT subsidiary.

"The public record of this epi-sode," Mr. Anderson declared, "is blotted with falsehood. The aura of scandal hangs over the whole matter. It will not be dispelled merely by self-serving disclaimers of present and former members of the administration and officials Concerning the alleged ITT campaign to discredit Mrs. Beard, Mr. Anderson told Senate investigators that Edward J. Gerrity, the corporation's senior vice-president for public relations, is behind the effort to 'paint his only Washington staff lobbyist as a crackpot and a drunk" and predicted that an attempt would be made to show that Mrs. Beard was not rational when she wrote the memo (WF).—The House took the un-usual step yesterday of instructing. its conferees in advance to insist. that its tough anti-busing movisions be kept in the kigher education authorization bill.

Rep. Carl Perkins D. Ry., chairman of the House Education Committee, pleaded in vain that this would defeat the purpose of the House-Senste conference, which is to provide a flexible atmosphere for working out dif-ferences between their two verzions of the bill.

But the minority leader, Rep. Gerald R. Pord, R., Mich., noted that the 20 House conferes had voted about 6 to 1 against the anti-busing provisions. He said that the House should emphasize in advance that the provisions, aimed at stopping busing public school students to schieve racial integration, should be kept in the bill. The Senate adopted much milder provisions:

Rep. Edith Green D., Ore, manager of the bill, agreed with Rep. Ford. She said that when an endments have been adopted by a 2-to-1 margin in the House but conferees are 6 to 1 against them, the "integrity of the House is at stake." New Hampshire Vote Results Called Generally Inconclusive

By William Chapman

WASHINGTON, March 9 (WP). Political observers, the morning after, regard New Hampshire's election Tuesday as generally inconclusive, although they thought Sen. George McGovern had emerged as a serious contender than they originally considered him

The prevailing view was that New Hampshire, despite the interest it generated as the first of the two dozen presidential primaries has little practical political impact compared to con-tests to come in Wisconsin and other big Northern states.

"It's going to be a crisscross year with lots of ups and downs. lots of fluctuation, but it won't be until we hit Illinois, Wisconsin, Ohio and Pennsylvania that we'll see a significant pattern," sald one labor union's political

Meanwhile, the counting of Democratic party convention delegates chosen by New Hampshire voters continued, with Sen. McGovern picking up ground on Sen, Edmund Muskie. New Hampshire's secretary of tate, Robert Stark, said today the process of compiling official totals probably would be com-pleted Monday.

A Tentative Edge Sen Muskie held a tentative 15-5 edge in the delegate race, but 8 percent of the precincts in the 1st Congressional District and 6 percent in the 2d were unreported.

With 98 percent of the preferential vote counted, Sen. Muskie had 48 percent, Sen. McGovern 37 percent, Mayor Sam Yorty of Los Angeles had percent and Sen Vance Hartke percent. Rep. Wilbur Mills had percent as a write-in can-

On the Republican side, President Nixon ran far ahead of his two rivals, Rep. Paul McCloskey, Calif., and Rep. John Ashbrook, Ohio, Mr. Nixon received about 69 percent of the vote, Rep. Mc-Closkey 20 percent and Rep. Ashbrook 10 percent.

Nixon Termed Pleased

White House Press Secretary Ron Ziegler described Mr. Nixon as "pleased by the strong sup-port" and "grateful to the voters of New Hampshire for their exression of confidence."

Both Mr. McCloskey and Mr. Ashbrook indicated that they would continue campaigning against the President in other primaries. Mr. Ashbrook said, "I'm not discouraged at all."

There may have been at least one casualty on the Democratic side. Sen. Hartke canceled an apperance in Florida, where the next primary will be held, leading to speculation that he might drop out. He reportedly was driving home from New Hampshire and could not be reached sulting from operations of the Social Security and National Service Life Insurance Trust Funds, or from interest on the national debt or farm price supports, won't be counted in computing the fiscal 1973 spending.

The bill passed yesterday raises the national debt limit to $450 billion only temporarily. On June 30, it will again revert to the per-manent level of $400 billion. This means that to meet needs of the Treasury in managing the debt, additional legislation again raising the ceiling will have to be passed before June 30. The administration may at that time seek the same $480-billion ceiling

Makarios, Aides Discuss Crisis

NICOSIA, March 9 (Reuters). -Archbishop Makarios met with his cabinet today to discuss the current crisis in relations with Greece amid indications that he would agree to an Athens demand that he surrender an arsenal of imported Communist weapons.

There was, however, no official comment on speculation that, while agreeing to place the weapons under United Nations control, he would reject the other Greek demand that he form a government of national unity.

Observers said that the archbishop would draft his final reply to last month's Greek demands after today's cabinet meeting and submit it to another special cabinet session before sending it to Athens, perhaps at the weekend or early next week.

U.S. Voter Registration Plan Loses Key Test

By Spencer Rich WASHINGTON, March 9 (WP). —Plagued by absenteeism, sup-porters of the postcard voter registration bill lost a key test vote in the Senate today, signaling grave peril for the measure in its present form. By a 44-37 vote, the Senate refused to permanently block consideration of a proposal by Sen. Sam J. Ervin jr., D., N.C., to send the bill to the Judiciary Committee. Supporters of the bili said its referral would mean its death in committee. After losing on the first test vote they prevented Sen. Ervin from bringing his proposal to a vote until next week hoping their absenice supporters would return by then. The bill applies to elections and primaries for all federal offices. It provides for the establishment a voter registration agency in the Census Bureau.

On the basis of census records, the agency would mail to every household and address in the country blank registration postcard forms, which anyone living at the address could fill out and return to his local registrar, U.S. citizens living abroad also would be eligible to register under the

Nixon Signs $3.19-Billion Bill

President Nixon today signed the foreign-aid appropriations legislation providing $3.19 billion for foreign economic and military assistance and some other programs.

The bill prohibits funds for Ecuador, reflecting congressional concern about the seizure of U.S. tuna boats by that country's na-Congress, however, authorized the President to waive the ban if he determines U.S. aid to that country is in the U.S. interest.

The appropriations bill provided $1.15 billion less than the administration requested, for the fiscal year which will end June 30. The appropriations, however, are $505.4 million above the previous fiscal year's legislation, International developmen; as-sictance was cut $538 million below the budget request; international security assistance, in the form of military grants and credit sales and security-supporting assistance, was cut $529.6

million. White House Press Secretary Ron Ziegler noted that the Peace Corps appropriations were cut but that Peace Corpsmen were not being recalled from

The son of ε late chief rabbi of Israel, Isaac Herzeg, Mr. Herzog was himself ordained a rabbi in his youth and in the mid-1960s was elected chief rabbi of Britain. He was never inaugurated, however, because of failing health. Mr. Herzog was born in Dublin in December. 1921, when his father was chief rabbi of Ireland. He moved to Jerusalem in 1939 when his father became chief rabbi of Palestine. He began his diplomatic activity as an aids to his father, whom he accompanied or represented on wartime missions to church leaders and international statesmen in attempts to save the Jews of

After Israel was created, he ioined the Ministry for Religious Afrairs and dictinguished himself in delicate negotiations with Christians regarding the holy places in Jerusalem. He was then invited to join the Foreign Ministry, where he held high positions in Jerusalem and abroad. He was minister to the United States between 1957 and 1960 and ambassador to Canada from 1960 to 1963.

The late Premier Levi Eshkol made him director-general of the premier's office and he became influential as Mr. Eshkol's adviser on foreign affairs, his speech writer and drafter of documents. When Mr. Eshkol died, Premier Golda Meir kept Mr. Herzog in office, but his influence waned.

Pentagon sources said that, among other things the Navy was considering sending a rescue vessel from the Polaris submarine base at Rota in Spain,

Instead of accepting American assistance, however, the Russians have assembled a flotilla of 10 ships in rough waters about 850 miles northeast of Newfoundland and appear to be sending several more vessels to the rescue.

Intelligence sources say that the submarine, which carries three nuclear-tipped missiles with a range of about 650 miles each, apparently experienced a breakand had ventilation problems.

The Russians maintain four the Atlantic coast of the United States and one off the Pacific Coast, Pentagon sources say. Each normally spends about 60 days on patrol and is replaced.

Patrols: Pentagon sources say oviet Union normally maintains the patrols with submarines that carry 16 missiles, each with a range of about 1,750 miles.

They were puzzled by the presence of another class of submarine in the Newfoundland area, but note that a submarine had been on station there for about two weeks prior to the appearance on Feb. 25 of the disabled craft, sending out an SOS.

One line of speculation centers on the fact that the Russians have modified at least one submarine to carry several new SSM-8 missiles, which have a range of about 3,500 miles. If they intend to modify more of craft to carry the new missile, they have wanted experience with the vessel off the

Kuomintang Bid Seen Sign That Chiang Will Stay

TAIPEL March 9 (AP).-The first firm indication that Gen. Chiang Kai-shek, 84, will accept another term as Nationalist Chinese president came today when the Central Advisory Committee of Gen. Chiang's ruling Kuomintang party passed a resolution recommending that he be named the party's presidential candidate.

Although it was not known whether the committee had consulted Gen. Chiang before passing its resolution, it seemed unlikely it would have acted without his approvat.

The party will meet in central committee session tomorrow to name its candidate.

Gen. Chiang said Feb. 20 that he would like another man to replace him as president, but political observers at the time interpreted his remarks as more good manners than firm inter-

Instead of the Western phrasebook standbys such as "my aunt's pen is on the table" or "I do not care for cauliflower," the first lesson for the people of China's largest city took a page from China's political book. The lesson consisted entirely of the teacher's reciting of two phrases: Long live Chairman Mao" and "A long, long life to Chairman

U.S. Secretary of State William P. Rogers announced this week that it was agreed with Chinese Premier Chon En-lai during President Nixon's Peking visit that more Americans should be enabled to study Chinese and more Chinese to study English.

If the Shanghai radio instruction is the result of such an agreement, the announcer introducing the first lesson March 1 made no mention of it. Listeners were told that "diligent study of foreign languages for the sake of the revolution is an important ask." Foreign languages, he added, are used "as a weapon to popularize revolutionary theories, to expose the truculence and cunning of the bourgeoisie and to reveal the laws governing their inevitable doom.

The English teacher was Men Lan-ying, a woman worker at state-managed cotton mill. She told listeners how she learned English over the past three years at a teachers' college and expressed appreciation that she can now teach a foreign language although she is an ordinary worker.

"With a favorable situation at home and abroad, teaching of foreign languages by radio is of profound political significance in view of the need to carry out the revolution in China and the world revolution." she said.

Her hunchtime instruction in the two phrases wishing Communist party Chairman Mao a long life was preceded by an introduction which said, "It is not difficult to study and master foreign languages." "Facts prove that it is quite possible for the masses of workers, peasants, soldiers and revolutionary cadres to study foreign languages well," the radio said. It cited the example of a group of Shanghai workers who began

WASHINGTON, March 9 (UPI) -A Florida judge, seeking to have the name of Cape Kennedy changed back to Cape Canaveral, testified yesterday that it was Mrs. Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis who suggested that President Lyndon B. Johnson rename the cape after her husband's assassination

Judge Knott said President John F. Mr. Johnson, said Judge Knott, then issued an executive order naming the cape's missile facility the John F. Kenneay

The Storms of State

There was a certain air of bravado about the annual report of the State Department to Congress. Not in its substance, which was sound and judicious, but when this comprehensive study of American foreign policy is read in the context of a Peking journey in which the Secretary of State played a distinct second fiddle to Henry A. Kissinger, presidential adviser and lord high everything else, it acquires a special flavor.

The respective roles of Mr. Rogers and Dr. Kissinger took on official status when the secretary was questioned on this subject by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, and some indication of the feeling of the senators was conveyed by their praise of him. Mr. Rogers repeated his satisfaction with the part assigned him in foreign policy, but it is quite obvious that the issue will not soon die.

Mr. Nixon is by no means the first President to have sought advice outside his cabinet, or, for that matter, to have upstaged his secretary of state. President Lincoln brought Seward under firm control (albeit in a confidential manner); it is sometimes hard to recall the names-Bryan and Lansing-of Wilson's chief official foreign policy advisers, although the mysterious Col. House is easily remembered; Cordell Hull had many problems with President Franklin D. Roosevelt and the ubiquitous Harry Hookins.

There are sound reasons why-even apart from the difficulties of reconciling the political verities represented in the cabinet and the personal predilections of a president buffeted by them without better cause,

-someone outside the President's formal family can be useful in times of diplomatic change. The State Department, like any other bureaucratic institution, tends to be better at preserving continuity and elaborating on existing policies than in promoting radical change. This is no reflection on the men who work for change within the department and often sacrifice their careers in the process. But there is inertia in any large government department, and its official head can be slowed down by it.

The best answer is to work toward rejuvenating the organization, and making its role in policy formation more efficient. But diplomacy cannot always wait on the necessarily slow processes of institutional change. and it is sometimes wiser to bypass the leadership than involve it too deeply in drastic alterations of course.

All of this, of course, is rather academic. As a practical matter, Mr. Nixon has placed a friend, and one who clearly supports when he does not initiate the kind of changes in foreign policy that the President seeks, in an invidious position. Mr. Nixon has also. through the way in which protocol was handled in Peking, shaken the morale of the State Department. It is doubtful that this was necessary, and it is probable it was unwise. Dr. Kissinger is a useful servant of the state, but surely that usefulness could be exploited without adding quite so much to the storms of state. Unlike Cardinal Wolsey. Mr. Rogers has not been broken by those storms, but it is unfair that so able and conscientious a public figure should be

New Hampshire: All Is Relative

"Victory" and "defeat," even "setback" and "surge," are highly relative terms when you employ them in the context of the New Hampshire primary. Mr. Nixon, for instance, overwhelmed his two Republican opponents, Reps. Ashbrook and McCloskey. Yet three out of every 10 Republicans who voted in Tuesday's contest voted for one of Mr. Nixon's two opponents, and the President attracted a smaller percentage of the Republican vote than he had in either 1960 or 1968—campaign years in which he had no effective opposition, but in which he also did not have the power and prestige that accrue to the incumbent president. Thus his showing can be (and has been) interpreted as a triumph by some and as a dark omen by others. Just andards and expectations, so that his 48 percent of the vote was at once enoughand not enough-to "win."

The point is that these things are tradi-New Hamsphire primary is concerned. weighed against a set of constantly shifting assumptions and values. In consequence there are two quite separate kinds of result to tally. One is the delegate count. The other is the psychological warfare effect. And at this early stage in the national political proceedings the second can be at least as influential as the first in determining the convention result. On this count, Sen. McGovern, confounding the expectations of many with his 37 percent of the Democratic vote, clearly was the "winner" of the New Hamsphire primary. He has demonstrated a capacity to produce a very respectable percentage of the vote in a fragmented primary and gone a long way to undermine the notion that his candidacy was somehow, endemically, a lost cause.

We mean to take nothing from his particular achievement in noting that the two fairly constant elements of New Hampshire primary history, however, are first, surprise, and second, evanescence. Estes Kefauver in 1952 and 1956. Henry Cabot Lodge in 1964, Eugene McCarthy in 1968-it is almost as if the voters of New Hampshire had a contract with the rest of us to produce the desired "upset," inviting us first to make our predictions and then to sit back and watch them so, Sen. Muskle failed to meet previously set be disproved. The question, as our political writer David Broder put it, w the voters of New Hampshire "victimize" this year? We'l, they pretty much spoiled the ambitions of Sen. Hartke and Mayor Yorty, tionally measured in quicksilver where the but an awful lot wasn't expected there. If they "victimized" anyone, it was Sen. Muskie. We have, all along, had a feeling that Sen. Muskie was in some sense letting his frontrunner role victimize him and his campaign as well, that both were sorely in need of liberation from its particular tyranny. Florida will tell us more. For now it is enough to wonder whether the voters of New Hampshire might not have liberated Sen. Muskie in the very act of victimizing

Fulbright and Radio Free Europe

At present, the people of the East bloc countries are following with bated breath the struggle between Sen. Fulbright and his opponents, centered around the senator's determined efforts to close down Radio Free Europe and Radio Liberty, the two American broadcasting operations stationed in Munich. To the people of Eastern Europe, Fulbright has become a symbol of the short-sightedness and witlessness of the West. This attitude is not surprising. The existence and function of the two stations have become a fixed component of political life in the East. since they serve as principal sources of information for the broad masses not only about events abroad but even more importantly on developments in their own coun-

Worried East Europeans fear that the West will lose a political battle of more fundamental importance than that of the Berlin Wall if Fulbright succeeds in his "crazy plan."

New Hampshire Primary

The protracted process of electing the man who will control the world's most important nuclear striking force, guide the biggest economy in the West, and determine whether Europe is left to defend itself began in New Hampshire. It must have proved satisfactory to the present incumbent of the White House. His hold on his own party was left in no doubt, and the Democrats emerged more divided than many had expected. -From the Guardian (London).

Democratic supporters seem now to be suffering more from apathy than active opposition to the White House incumbent. It remains to be seen how well Hubert Humphrey, John Lindsay and Sen. Jackson do in Florida on Tuesday. Certainly there is a long road to go before the nominating convention at Miami Beach in July, but on present showing the Democrats appear leaderless. If it stays that way it will be bad for American democracy. -From the Daily Telegraph (London).

* * * It is hard enough to defeat an incumbent president in any circumstances. President Nixon, whatever his detractors say about him, is a seasoned campaigner. He trounced the other Republicans in New Hampshire without the slightest trouble. With his visit to China and his forthcoming visit to Moscow, Mr. Nixon is taking all the lime-

Japan's Sun Also Rises

By C. L. Sulzberger

TOKYO—As a consequence of the implied shift in Asian relationships featured by President Nixon's Peking visit, Japan now finds itself in the delightful position of being simultaneously courted by all three superpowers. the United States, Russia and

This fascinating position is a tribute not to Japanese military strength but to its extraordinary economic vitality which makes it, as Asia's most massive trading nation, a kind of superpower although its armed forces could easily be defeated in an abstract war game by those of South Vietnam or South Korea, Japan is too realistic to get into that kind of dead-end business again. It has an efficient if modest self-defense force, thereby technically violating its own constitution, and is protected under weapons are not nuclear; they are the worker, the yen and the factory.

No A-Weapons Planned

Foreign Minister Takeo Fukuda, a taut, highly intelligent man who will almost surely become premier this summer, acknowledges: "With development of nuclear weapons it became evident that if they are used mankind will be annihilated. I can't foresee a third world war.

"Consequently economic strength becomes much more important than military strength. Japan could make nuclear weapons but has no intention of doing so, Instead we wish to employ our economic strength to gain an increasing voice in the international community. The tradition once was that a nation used its economic power to become a military power but that is not the case with us today, I think this is unprecedented in history, at least in modern history."

The world is no longer divided into two expansionist cold war blocs seeking adherents from among uncommitted nations in order to gain greater strength for an eventual showdown. There are now several blocs and bloclets swirling down the stream. The different rivals want

Japan's favor to further their own trade and/or economic derelopment ambitions, not to build up their strategic position. Nor do they threaten Japan with some form of extinction. It is worth more alive and working

Thus, while Japanese businessmen and their products swarm never able to do during the militaristic "Coprosperity Sphere," foreign capitals ogle Tokyo, It is considered axiomatic that relations between Japan and Com-munist China will soon start warming up. One possible consequence will be a joint effort to explore potential petroleum and natural gas deposits lying off the China coast.

The U.S. is bound to make amends for lack of delicacy in springing both dollar devaluation and Nixon's Peking picnic unawares upon the Japanese, Furthermore, apart from good manners, we are pushed immutably by the need to shrink the gap in our enormous Japanese trade, a gap that favors Tokyo. But preconditions for uninterrupted friendship exist because we are allied and depend on mutual commerce and because, as Fukuda says, Japan wants good relations with all countries "especially the United States?

Enter Russia

Russia is therefore called upon to get into the game and it has done so handsomely. Ever since it learned the startling news that Nixon was going to Peking, Tokyo initiated a policy of "small steps" toward Moscow.

Before Nixon left for China Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko flew unexpectedly to Tokyo with smiles and talk of huge Japanese investment and development opportunities in Siberian timber, oil, coal, natural gas, shipyards. He was reminded that formal peace has yet to be signed between the two countries and Japan still seized by Russia. That matter wasn't settled but Japan is going to send a ranking minister to Moscow this year for more discussions and henceforth there will be annual exchanges. Peace negotiations may start soon but Russia must face the need to yield some island territory as a price for Japanese money and technical skill in opening Siberia. This is a stiff price because Moscow regards territorial cession as a bad precedent with all its neighbors from China to Romania yapping for other slices. Nevertheless, the big thing is that Tokyo has all the superpower capitals suddenly cottoning-up.

This is not only flattering to a bruised national ego but helpful to the pocketbook. Once again the sun also rises here.

Letter From Leningrad—2

Insulated Cultural Life

By Robert G. Kaiser

LENINGRAD, — European culture entered Russia through this regal city in the 18th and 19th centuries, a prolonged debut which left an enduring mark. Soviet Leningrad—like imperial St. Petersburg before it—bustles with cultural activity, much of it housed in the same opulent halls the czars built for their artistic

The times have changed, haturally. In 1914 the best seats in the principal opera house—a plush combination of white, pale blue and quantities of gold lest cost $13. Today they're $2.80. The number of theaters in town has doubled to nearly 20. The coming of Soviet power has been noted: The Romanovs' imperial seal, which once appeared in gold above the stage in the opera house, has been replaced by a delicate hammer and sickle. The city's cultural repertoire includes a dose of socialist realism.

But in many ways Leningrad's cultural life must be much like St. Petersburg's. The ballets of Marius Petipa are still danced by the Kirov Ballet, which is still one of the best classical ballet troupes in the world. The repertoire of the city's two great symphony orchestras is still predominantly classical, Shakespeare (still not likely to anger the censor) still runs in the theaters. Large state subsidies still make all of this possible.

Special Haven

Leningrad's cultural life seems to be insulated from the daily bustle of Soviet existence, a special haven for values that are older than the Bolshevik revolution. Politics affect culture, of course, as they did under the czar. Political considerations insure that the material performed by all Leningrad's cultural organizations will be generally oldfashioned and unprovocative. Only acceptable ideas are aired on Leningrad's stage.

For Vladilen Semenov, the artistic director of the Kirov Ballet. as for many others in the arts here, the standard and even the techniques of old Petersburg have thrived during 55 years of Communist rule.

Even the school that trains the Kirov's dancers has remained in its pre-revolutionary home. & building it has outgrown butaccording to the director—could never abandon: "We don't want to leave this historic place.

Ballet still produces great stars, whose personal fame seems inconsistent with the general emphasis on collective endeavor in this country. That doesn't appear to bother the dancers, however, Natalya Dudinskaya, one of the Kirov's great primas of the 1930s and 1940s, is driven around Leningrad in a 20-year-old Russian limousine, strawberry pink. The first Petersburg ballet ned in 1739 patronage of Empress Anne. The teachers were foreigners, and the pupils were children of the servant class. The current school is a direct descendant, but now "foreign students come here." as a former dancer named Marietta Fragopulo, the school librarian, said with satisfaction.

The school offers an eight-year course, combining ballet with regular academic subjects. The students arrive at 8:30 in the morning and don't leave before 8:30 at night. Ninety are chosen each year, largely on the basis of physical exams, from 1,500-2,000 applicants. Twenty percent drop out before graduation.

Three to four hours a day are spent on ballet and related subjects, but the students advance extremely slowly, devoting thousands of hours to five basic movements and classical training The school has 100 teachers to instruct about 460 students.
"Foreigners can't believe we have so many," Miss Fragopulo reports.

This is the Kirov school, in effect, and its first duty is to produce new dancers for the great company. But each year only about five boys and girls are chosen for the Kirov. The rest take jobs in Leningrad's other two ballet groups, or more often-in the provinces, with little prospect of ever advancing to the Kirov or the Bolshoi in Moscow. Hard work is clearly a common ingredient of Leningrad cultural enterprises. The actors of the theater of Leningrad have spent as much as six months rehearing one play ("The Threepenny Opera"), according to the theater's chief director. Igor Vindi-mirov. The theater currently maintains an active repertoire of 18 works. Cultural work is well-rewarded by Soviet standards, though very few performers travel in chauffeured limousines. A starting Kirov dancer gets 100 rubles ($120) a month, plus a room to live in, which is difficult to find in Leningrad. More experienced artists get their own apartments. and can earn up to 400 rubles month (which can amount to lot of money when both husband and wife are leading dancers as often happens here). Some can also go abroad with the company, one of the greatest privileges bestowed on Soviet citizens. The musicians in the 100member orchestra of the Little Opera and Ballet Theater, Leningrad's second company, make up to 200 rubles a month. average factory worker in this country earns about 130.)

Performers here also enjoy public recognition and high status. Nevertheless, two of the brightest talents Leningrad has produced in modern times-Rudolph Nureyev and Natalia Makarova, both Kirov dancershave fled to the West while on tours abroad.

Nureyev is long gone and not topic of current conversation in Leningrad, but Makarova fled to the American Ballet Theater in late 1970, and a visitor is asked repeatedly about her. "Why did she do it?" one old teacher asked with a furrowed brow. "She had everything here

Too Much Classicism

Makerova has said-like Nureyev before her-that she sought opportunities to break out of the Kirov's rigorous classicism, that she wanted to dance in contemporary styles.

It is impossible to know how strong such instincts still are among other artists in Leningrad The local idea of contemporary art is well behind the Western sarily a criticism, of course. If you ask Alexander Demitricy.

a conductor at the Little Operaand Ballet Theater, what modern works his company is doing, the answer is "Porgy and Bess." Kirov is preparing a ballet by Benjamin Britten as its "new offering for this season. The director of one of the city's best theaters says he hones to get approval to stage Edward Albee's "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?"

A hundred years ago, at the height of the great Russian renaissance of the 19th century, contemporary art in St. Petersburg meant Tchaikovsky, Rimsky-Korsakov, Pushkin, Dostoevski, Gogol and the rest. The devotion to culture that has marked the Soviet period has not yet produced any new talents to rival those.

NANKING.—The enormous difference in outlook that separates China from the United States finds its most dramatic expression in the field of culture. And nothing shows it better than the two novelists and a poet presented to me when I asked the authorities here in Nanking to meet some creative writers.

Sun Yat-tien, the poet, is a 36-year-old former electrical engineer with a rough face and hair worn crew-cut style. He worked for years in the coal mines, and began writing verse on the side before he became a full-time poet. His regular income, paid by the writers' section of the local Communist party bureau, is about $40 a month, which compares with an average of $25 monthly for industrial workers.

Mr. Sun has published six collections of poems and one book of short stories. He recited one of his poems, which was translated as follows:

"Red flags are flying at the mines/ they were hoisted in the year of liberation/ the backs of the miners have been straight ever since." Ma Chun-yung is a 48-year-old novelist who draws about $70 a.

month in regular stipend from the writers' section. He has spent most of his life in the countryside and writes on rural themes One of his novels, called "In Wind and Rain," sold 30,000 copies. Teng Feng-chang is a 42-yearold former newspaperman. Finding it "difficult to describe the deeds and high ideals of the workers in journalism." he "started to write novels and short stories." He makes about $45 a month in regular stipend. One of his novels which sold over

200,000 copies earned him royalties of about $800.

The novel tells the story of a girl silk weaver who sets all the production records in her prov-ince. A new kind of silk is introduced in another province, and the girl is asked to weave it. Her family and friends warn against the switch, saying she will be less proficient with the new silk and lose her reputation. She decides to try the new silk anyway. In the end she sets a new record for production. None of the three writers has had any books published since the Cultural Revolution began back in 1965. They hope they will be published later this year or next year. In the meantime, according to

In particular, he feels, there is a need to emulate the eight revolutionary operas produced by Madame Mao or Chiang Ching which tell dramatic stories of the victory won by the Communists over the Japanese and the forces of Chiang Kai-shek.

Mr. Teng answers. Of Dostoevski, he says: "He is a very good writer, a very good depicter of character. But many Dostoevski's characters are what we would call surplus people." Of Chekhov, he says: "He gave a very good description of ordi-nary people. But he did not depict workers, peasants and soldiers."

I asked what they think of Alexander Solzhenitsyn, whom I identify as the Russian who won the Nobel Prize in literature last year. Mr. Teng says: "During the time of Lenin and Stalin there were good Soviet writers. Now Russian literature has de-generated into revisionism. We are not interested in their work. I am sorry to tell you I have never heard of him."

They asked me about leading American novelists of the present time. I mention Norman Mailer, John Undike, Saul Beilow, J.D. Salinger and William Styron.

ful caricature of his life, his attitudes and his work, he wrote in a series of letters to Charles : Poore, a book critic on The New York Times. The 10 letters will be auctioned tonight.

The letters, which span the years from 1949 to 1953, also disclose that the Nobel Prize writer distainfully resented imputations that he "was an over-sensitive boy cruelly burt by hideous life," that he was lacking in physical courage and that his capacity for drink made him "an alcoholic." In one letter, he told Poore: Twe never done a dann thing in my life that was worth a damn that was legal'-a remark that he did not elucidate. Hemingway also revealed that he wrote three of his most notable short stories—"The Killers," "Today Is Friday" and "Ten Indians" in one day in May, 1926, "morning, afternoon and evening." He relates that he rewrote the last chapter of "A Farewell to Arms"

On the Arts Agenda

An exhibit of the life work of Lastlo Moholy-Nagy, including about 200 paintings, sculptures, sketches, photographs and metal work, is being shown by the archives of the Bauhaus in Berin until March 30. Experimental films made by Moholy-Nagy, who taught at the Bauhaus from 1923 to 1928, also are on view. The archives were transferred from Darmstadt to Berlin last year.

Mazowsze, the national Polish ensemble, will make 13 dance appearances at the Theatre des Champs-Elysées in Paris from March 16 to 28, with matinee performances on Sundays, March 19 and 26. The group is composed of more than 100 dancers and chorists and an orchestra

The first-staged London per-formances of Cavalit's "L'Or-mindo," in the version realized by Raymond Leppard, will be presented on March 22 through 25 by the London Opera Center at Sadler's Wells Theatre, Leppard will conduct and the productions will be staged by Colin Graham and designed by John

And he asserts that "The Short Happy Life of Francis Macomber," another short story. Was based on a nersonal episode "about a woman I was mixed up with one time" and its locale was transplanted to Africa for artistic reasons. Advances In other significant, disclosures

Hemingway tells of rebuffing the advances of a British homosexual when he was in a hospital in Milan in World War I and of accepting an assignation with a French writer who came to his flat for that purpose with her paramour, a renowned intellectu al. The incident, told in vivid detail, is unprintable,

The letters, some in holograph and some typewritten, are scheduled to be auctioned at 7:30 p.m. tonight at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel by the Charles Hamilton Galleries. They are among the first Hemingway letters to appear on the auction market since the writer's death by suicide in July, 1961, at the age of 61. They com from the estate of Poore, who died last July at 68. Poore, a Times critic for 40 years before his retirement in 1966, met Hemingway in the late 1930s and remained a lifelong friend.

Their correspondence was initiated when Poore started to put together "The Hemingway Reader," selections from the writer's works, published in 1953.

The existence but not the substance of the letters was known to Carlos Baker when he wrote his semi-authorized biography of the writer in 1969. Apprised of the letters' contents yesterday, Mr. Baker, a professor at Princeton said:

These letters are indeed interesting and, like all Hemingway letters, tend to shed additional light on his life and character in the sense that they deepen our awareness of his nuances. But I would doubt that they would alter the major outline of his life as elaborated in my biography or in other biographies."

Explanations In explaining himself as a writer to Poore, Hemingway said: "You can tell me to shut up or go home, but what I'm boring you with is the fact that I could have written the old prose as it should be written. But it had been done so well and I thought we needed a new prose to handle our time or that part of it I've seen." "There is no rule on how to write," he went on. "Sometimes comes easily and perfectly. Sometimes it is like drilling rock and then blasting it out with Hemingway was especially perturbed, he told Poore, by critics' reports that he was a rowdy youth. "I never had fights nor almost never except for money," he wrote, adding:

colm] Cowley's and this [Philip] Young's theory that I was an over-sensitive boy cruelly hurt by hideous life is wishful thinking. -Just like they see Oak Park [his think it was like that when I was a kid. I suppose Chicago was tough but we didn't think it was tough. It was just how it

The writer was reacting in part "Ernest Hemingway," a book published by Mr. Young, an academic critic in 1952, which upset him. He informed Poore: "Young makes me out a coward because some character in a story drinks before an attack. couldn't drink before an attack because it would make me too thirsty. But always drink afterward. And sometimes during it if it is too bad or if you see it is going to be OK.

"Then do you think a man is a coward if he has a very big wound and has to wear the chin strap in his helmet across his lips when they tremble automatically? Some character in a story does that so Young says he Hemingway returned to this theme in another letter, saying, "Once there must have been 20,-000 men who knew I was not coward, nor spooky, nor very worried, nor nervous. Say 60 percent are dead. That still leaves quite a few." He was alluding to his experiences in World War I and in the Spanish Civil War and World War II, when he was a battlefront correspondent. Tales of drinking and its effect on his capacity for work also bothered Hemingway. "Take alcohol," he said in one letter. "Rummies are rummies and can't themselves and shouldn't before you were 14 and drank ever since and love to drink and can still write well when you are 53 do you rate as an alcoholic?"

Drinking

Then he went on to recount a day of drinking at the Floridita, one of his favorite Havana bistros. "People didn't pick on me and with a jai-alai player in 1943. "We I didn't pick on people. [Mal- drank on our feet without sitting down, we were never drunk, nor wet, nor any more stupid than any other day and when we left the Floridita ... we had drunk 16 frozen daiquiris each. Each drink had 4 ounces of Bacardi rum. I read all night at home until daylight, worked with charts etc.,

Although it has been generally known that Hemingway was the chiect of a homosexual advance when he was in a Milan hospital recovering from leg and thigh wounds in World War I, the details have been cloudy, according to Prof. Baker. In the writer's version of the incident he told

"This Englishman used to bring me Marsala. That was fine, but then he got wet about wanting to see my wounds dressed. At that time I didn't know well brought up people were like that. I thought it was only tramps. I explained to him that I was not that way and that he couldn't come to the hospital any more and that I couldn't take his Mar-

So I said I would keep the Marsala and I gave him a handful of beautiful pieces of cutoff sections of metal rods that had once been a part, if not an integral part, of me and he left in

Pulitzer Prize

In one of the last letters, Hemingway described the reaction he and his wife Mary had when he won the Pulitzer Prize in 1953. He "Mary and I were down the Megano de Casigua... when we caught the prize news on the evening newscast. Miss Mary made we opened some special cheese for supper to celebrate . . . Miss Mary said I was her Pulitzer Prizewinning husband and had they given it to me for being a good boy for nearly three years or what? I told her I had never understood the Pulitzer Prize very well but that I had heaten Tony Pulitzer shooting and maybe it

In a press conference this afternoon, he said that France "is not buying any dollars" at present. If the pressure on the franc continues, he added the government will adopt measures to protect the franc and check speculative capital movements.

He said he was "struck" by the change in spirit he found among France's EEO partners at this week's meeting of Finance Ministers in Brussels. The ideas expressed there, he said, were close to those advocated by France—implying the rejuctance to impose some kind of controls was diminishing.

In reply to a question, the min-ister stated that he could not say whether other EEC members would adopt France's two-tier ex-

But the feeling among foreign exchange dealers and bankers is that authorities will be forced to resort to new controls to stem the dollar inflows.

The alternative is to allow the dollar to breach its floor and be left free to float—as it did last year. But there is much doubt that a new float would be tolerat-ed, as that would reduce the competitiveness of European exports on world markets.

French Foreign Minister Mau-rice Schumann told an American Club luncheon here today that Europeans must start thinking about limiting the dollar influx to protect their own interests. "No settlement of the present crisis is conceivable if it hampers the expansion of our economies, he added.

Shinjin Expects Pact With GM

General Motors and Shinjin Motor are expected to sign a formal agreement about March 20 on a $48-million joint venture to produce automobiles in South Korea, the Korean firm reports. Shinjin previously said that both companies had agreed the project be equally controlled and now says that the project firm will operate an assembly plant and an engine foundry just outside Seoul, with production expected to begin in August. Ford Motor Co. also plans to produce automobiles in Koren with another Korean firm.

VW to Build Plant in Yugoslavia

Volkswagen reports it plans to cooperate with the Yugoslav VW importer. Unis, in building a plant to produce vehicles and parts. Construction of the plant at Vogosca, near Sarajevo, has to be approved by Yugoslav officials, VW says. Management of the new plant is to be shared equally by VW and Unis. Capital spending is to be financed 49 percent by VW and 51 percent Unis. Two U.K. Tobacco Firms Discuss Ties

LONDON, March 9 (AP-DJ) .-British-American Tobacco (BAT) and Imperial Tobacco Group, two of Britain's biggest companies, are holding exploratory talks that could lead to closer ties or even a merger, sources within both of about 2,000 barrels daily, and this is expected to rise to 4,000 barrels 2 day. Further development wells are being drilled in the area.

Toyo Kogyo, Ford Terminate Talks

Kohel Matsuda, president of Toyo Kogro,

Japan's No. 3 auto maker, says his company and Ford Motor Co. have agreed to terminate three-year-old negotiations on a capital tie-up. Mr.

Matsuda reported this in Tokyo upon his return from the United States, where he held a last round of negotiations with Ford. He said Toyo Kogyo will concentrate on the production and sale of its rotary-engine cars rather than to con-tinue long negotiations with Ford. The com-panies first started negotiating in 1969, but they were never successful. In the past, they have discussed both an agreement for technical cooperation and a plan under which Ford would acquire a minority interest in Toyo Kogyo.

The high-level talks, sources emphasize, are strictly exploratory and might lead nowhere. The ssions arose because of Britain's proposed entry into the Common Market, Both companies are concerned about the effects of EEC policies on their markets.

Imperial already owns 28.53 per-cent of BAT, the world's largest producer of tobacco products. The two firms each own 50 percent of Mardon packaging and plastics interests, and they also control Tobacco Securities Trust Ltd., an investment company.

Despite these links, the two operate autonomously and, because of a long-standing agreement, do not compete. BAT's business is mostly carried on out-side the United Kingdom and Treiand, while Imperial's is almost wholly domestic. Outside of to-bacco, Imperial has food interests, while BAT is active in cosmetics and perfumes, paper and food.

Imperial was founded in 1901 as an amalgamation of U.K. companies that banded together to thwart attempts by American Tobacco Co. to take over the British industry. The next year, Imperial and American called a truce and formed BAT to take over both their export businesses. It acquired from American and Imperial ownership of their brands and trademarks throughout most of the world except Britain, Ireland for shares in BAT. In 1911, the U.S. Supreme Court ordered American Tobacco to divest itself of its BAT shares, leaving Imperial a major share-holder in the export concern. After the split-up, a new, smaller American Tobacco Co. still retained rights to Imperial brands it had sold in the United States before 1911. BAT still had rights to Imperial's and American's trademarks abroad.

and the United States in return

At a result, Lucky Strike and Pall Mall cigarettes, for example, are made and sold by American Brands, as they were original American Tobacco Co. brands. In Britain and Ireland, Lucky Strikes and Pall Malls are sold by Imperial. In most of the remainder of the world, Luckies and Pall Malls are BAT products (al-though as a result of a later agreement, they are an American Brands product in France).

Pending Lawsuit A lawsuit pending on appeal in Milan could effectively destroy the 1992 agreement establishing BAT's and Imperial's businesses. at least within the houndaries of an enlarged EEC.

The suit, called the Sirena case, could, if opinions by the lower and the EEC Court of Justice in Luxembourg are upheld, overturn European licensing law. The appeals court is generally expected to affirm earlier opin-

The result of an affirmation would mean that Lucky Strike and Pall Mall cigarettes could be sold throughout the EEC by Imperial, BAT and American Brands.

Smokers in Europe could find packs of each brand made by three different manufacturers and costing different prices all on the same counter. It is this specter that is one of the factors behind the high-level Imperial-BAT talks.

The Sirena case involves a trademarked pre-shaving cream, Prep, which Mark Alien of Detroit licensed Sirena of Milan to sell in Italy. Another Milanese concern, Novimpex, began importing the cream from a company

When Sirena moved to enioin Novimpex from selling the cream, a Milan court ruled such a restriction would be against the spirit of the treaty founding the Common Market.

The international tobacco industry is rife with licensing agreements. If the lower court decision stands, bizarre marketing situations could arise.

While BAT could face com-petitive problems on the Con-tinent as a result of the Sirena case, Imperial's domestic market likewise faces changes when Britain enters the EEC. Besides the Sirena case, factors that could affect Imperial, as well as other U.K. tobacco manufacturers, are adoption of the European system of tobacco taxation, discontinuance of preferential outy rates on Commonwealth tobacco, a common agri-cultural policy that would give a cost advantage to EEC-grown leaf and abolition of protective tariffs, which would enable continental brands to enter Britain duty-free.

It is highly unlikely that British-American and Imperial vill let themselves become competitors after 70 years. It is also likely that governmental authorities would raise questions about a merger of the companies on monopoly grounds. Neither company is hinting what the solution to their problems will be.

tack, the influential group, which includes almost all U.S. banks, expressed its "official views" in a letter to Sen. William Proxmire D., Wis., chairman of the Joint onomic Committee of Congress. Allen P. Stults, ABA president, declared that the Federal Reserve

Board's policy of making "credit conditions much easier as the economy moves upward has certain disturbing implications." The weakness of the dollar in foreignexchange markets "and continued uneasiness in domestic money markets," he said, "reflect these The Fed's "failure to achieve a steadier pattern in monetary policy" is due, in part, to the need to finance the Nixon administration's large budget deficits, Mr. Stults suggested. Urging the Congress and administration to "hold the growth of federal ex-penditures below present budget levels during the critical months that lie ahead," he warned that the alternative is "excessive upward pressures" on interest rates and "seriously disruptive changes" in credit flows.

Budget Costs Seen Tripled

WASHINGTON, March 9 (AP-DJ .- The annual cost of new initiatives in President Nixon's latest budget will triple to $33 billion in 1977, a former adminis-tration official calculates.

The analysis was prepared by Murray L. Weidenbaum and Dan Larkins. Until last summer, Mr. Weidenbaum was assistant secretary of the Treasury for economic The administration's budget document contains a table estimating the cost increases of various proposals, Mr. Weiden-baum noted, suggesting that it has been largely ignored because totals were not provided. "We added the demn thing up." he said at a news conference, and found that the total would slightly exceed the expected revenue growth

Among the major increases that would be brought about by legislation proposed in the budget for the fiscal year starting July 1, the study shows, are revenue sharing with state and local governments, from $5.6 billion the first year to $11.4 billion in fiscal 1977; welfare reform, from $350 million to $5.5 billion, and social security benefits boosts and other healtheducation-welfare proposals, from $4.5 billion to $15.1 billion.

SEC Rules Seen Basis for Central Market System

ment, the SEC said exchanges and the OTC markets in exchange-listed stock should be tied ingether into a central market system. The policy statement left unclear exactly what role individual exchanges would play in such a system and has various committees working on implementing the policy statement. Apparently the commission has decided to move ahead with its plans for a central market system without waiting for congressional committees to complete studies of the securities industry. Concerning transactions disclosure, observers noted that four stock exchanges already have such systems, the best-known being the New York Stock Exchange lar's rate against the guilder today, up from $45.5 million yester-After the bank left the market the dollar hovered around the 3.1718 guilder support point. In Frankfurt, the dollar recover-ed from its low of 3.1515 deutsche marks to close at 3.154 DM. marginally above the mandatory support level of 3.15 DM. Dealers an underlying touch of hysteria constantly present.

Air of Crisis Thickens as Dollar Dips Again

On the two-tier markets, which separate commercial funds used for international trade and supported by the central bank from ail other transactions, the so-called financial French franc closed at a 2.7 percent premium over its official celling while the Belgian financial franc was at a 1.8 percent premiunt. The com-mercial franc rates were both within a fraction of the mandatory support level. News that the Bank of England had left its discount rate un-changed at 5 percent was fol-lowed by a sharp rise in sterling. After hitting $2.6510, the highest it has been since the 1967 devaluation, sterling closed at $2.64375 (its official ceiling is $2.6643).

Although the dollar declined as low as 3.7875 Swiss francs, it stayed well off the official floor of 3.7535 and by the close had improved.

One result of the dollar's weakness is that all of the EEC currencies are now well within the 2.25 percent fluctuation limit against each other that has been established as an EEC goal. The difference between the Belgian franc, the strongest of the currencies, and the lire, the weakest, was around 1.7 percent today, compared to 2.4 percent yester day and 3.1 percent Monday.

Although officials had set a July 1 deadline for maintaining the spread to a maximum of 2.25 percent, the prevailing rates mean officials could begin their con-certed action to keep them within the narrow band at any time.

While bankers acknowledge that a Europe-wide two-tier for-eign exchange market is the most likely possibility to emerge from the present crisis, they at the same time deplore the bureau-cratic apparatus that would have to be installed to make it work. Barring a dramatic response from the United States, such as a commitment to make official dollar holdings convertible or more rigid control on capital exports, European bankers see little likelihood of escaping without some form on new controls.

Some of the most difficult bidding decisions occur when three no-trump, four of a major and five of a minor are all possible An example is the diagramed deal.

What prospects do North-South have in three no-trump, assuming a diamond lead?

With a normal five-four division of diamonds, three no-trump has no chance. But in this case East's pre-emptive jump overcall of two diamonds announced that he held at least six diamonds and little else. As he has no possible entry, three no-trump succeeds as the cards lie: The diamond ace is held up until the third round and West can only take one trick in each major.

Making 11 tricks in clubs presents insuperable problems, but North-South reached four spades, which could not be defeated. South had a difficult

THE EWINGS

SHADOWS IN PARADISE

By Erich Maria Remarque. Translated from the German h Ralph Mannheim. Harcourt Brace Joranovich. 305 pp. 863

Reviewed by Christopher Lehmann-Haupt

HAD hoped that with the pub-lication of John O'Hara's "The which he finished two months before his death in April, 1970—I might have the opportunity to say a few things in defense of O'Eara fiction.

And for a time, reading "The Ewings" that hope seemed justified. For a time, that dramatic economy was there, which might have provided the occasion to observe how more highly regard-ed novelists could learn a thing or two from O'Hara, especially about getting people on and off stage (or in and out of bed). For a time, that powerful sense of milieu was there—indirectly conveyed through that shockingly direct dialogue -- which might have been an occasion to wager that, perhaps a hundred years from now, it would be to O'Hara that readers would turn to learn what America was like in the first half of the 20th century. (Of course they would be wrong, but their mistake would be understandable, and greatly to O'Hara's credit.)

But such thoughts could not last long. For while the Ewings, Edna and Bill, are briefly interesting once it has been established that they met at the University of Michigan just be-fore World War I—she a Kappa Gamma Theta; he a Delta Kappa Epsilon; once it has been established that Bill is headed for big things in the Cleveland law firm of his recently deceased father. while all about him people are collapsing into each other's beds (and not necessarily with the opposite gender); once it has been established that the only causes for Bill's success are his pedigree, his connections, his blandness (his friends say he's tough and shrewd, but we never see any direct evidence), his willingness to play by the rules, and maybe the fact that he's a regular guy in the hay (just in case we think him stuffy?) ... after all that, the story grows extremely dull.

It is not that one particularly minds O'Hara's view of people as money - making, status - seeking. sexual-relations automatons, sometimes efficiently programed, sometimes not. He had every right to his cynicism (or was it his snobbishness?), just so long as there was some tension in its dramatization.

But there's no tension at all in "The Ewings." As the novel progresses, it sounds more and more as if O'Hara was growing just as automated as his characters grinding it out by rote. So instead of taking the occasion word for O'Hara, let us let 'The Ewings" quietly passAnd pass on to Erich Maria Remarque's "Shadows in Paradise," which I turned to simply because it is also a posthumously published novel (Remarque died five months after O'Hara, but seven years older), also the work of an ex-journalist who wrote a form of Hemingway, and also the final fruit of a career whose the was best ("All Quiet on the Western Front" was Remarque "Appointment in Samarra") which went downhill thereast But in contrast to "The Ewing "Shadows in Paradise" comes a distinctly pleasant surprise.

It is not exactly that Remand is doing anything new for his His story is one of refugees on ing with the aftermath of the man anti-Nazi journalist, artis in wartime New York City a full bag of nightmarish mer ories that awaken him screeme in the night. He spends the mainder of war and book agin ing to bad thoughts of Europ new experiences in New York 25 Hollywood, troubled refugi friends, and the uncertain pos war future.

Nor is the writing technique departure: It's that tough-mine but highly civilized "T" narration dividing itself between set analysis, pungent dialogue, at witty character portraits. But if "Shadows in Paradis

One could accuse the novel a certain weary romanticism, conjuring up tattered ghosts, i best forgotten. Except that d keeps saying to its prose. Cincinnati, trailing throughout, rallied for 42 points in the final period to score a 122-105 victory over Phoenix at Cincinnati. Center Sam Lacey of the Royals was ejected from the game at 7:38 of the last period for punching Neal Walk of the Suns. The Royals then ran off 17 straight points. Cincincati's Nate Archibald had a game-high 35 points and added 14 assists. SuperSonics Sping Seattle

SEATTLE, March 9 (AP).-The Seattle SuperSonics of the Na-tional Basketball Association filed a claim against the city yesterday for an unspecified amount of damages resulting from injury to Spencer Haywood when he slipped on the watery floor of the Coliseum Sunday. The star forward suffered a bruised right knee and missed Tuesday night's 105-98 loss to Baltimore. Haywood worked out yesterday. Melville Monheimer jr., attorney for the SuperSonics, issued a statement on behalf of owner Sam Schulman in which the city was charged with "gross negligence" for not repairing the leaky

Pares Privat. March 9 (NYT).-It looks more like a camp for refugees from the New York Mets-with Donn Clen-denon, Art Shamsky. Don Shaw, Jim Bibby, Rich Folkers, Charlie Hudson and Bill Denehy in those gray stretch baseball suits with the bright red trim. But it is really the spring train ing camp for the St. Louis Carcinals, the team that came closest to catching the Pittsburgh Pirates in 1971 in the National League's

But the Cardinals, who have the biggest payroll in the league because of their success in the 1960s, are still searching for the jackpot of the 1970s here. They are one of the few teams in Florida that can match bats with the world champion Pirates, whom they out-hit last season by one point with a team average of 275. They also are the only team with four 300 hitters at the top of the line-up-Lou Brock, Matty Alou, Ted Simmons and Joe Torre, 7 Games Behind

But their Achilles' heel is still pitching, and they are hustling alongside the palm trees trying to plece together a staff that will keep them in the race. They finished last September seven games behind Pittsburgh and seven ahead of the New York Mets and Chicago Cubs.

"What's the difference this spring?" asked Red Schoendienst, the former switch-hitting infielder who is starting his eighth season as manager of the Cardinals. The difference is we have more pitchers to choose from-and more who can't be sent back." Schoendienst meant that the gaps would have to be filled by pitchers with too much seniority

PETERSBURG, Fla., to be reassigned to the minor leagues if they didn't make it. He can be sure of Bob Gibson, who just turned 36; Rick Wise, just acquired from the Phillies for Steve Carlton in a swap of holdonts, and Jerry Reuss and Reggie Cleveland. The last two, though, just broke even last year—Reuss won 14, lost 14; Cleveland won 12, lost 12. Both allowed more than four runs a game. And after them, Schoendienst starts to deal in "probables." "Jim Maloney could make it as No. 5," he said, nodding toward the 32-year-old right-hander who pitched only 47 innings the last two years because of injuries and who hasn't won a game since 1969. "Jim Bibby could make it, too." he went on nodding toward the 28-year-old ex-Met who didn't pitch at all in 1970 after surgery on his back.

"Or Al Santorini could make it," he said, nodding toward the 23-year-old righthander the Cardinals obtained from San Diego, but who hasn't won a game since April, 1970. That is, none of the three candidates has won a game in the big leagues in nearly two years—which may give an edge to Santiago Guzman, who won one late in 1970.

Behind the starting rotation stands the bullpen, and that's problem No. 2. The best bet is lefthander Don Shaw, who did strong job last summer with a 7-2 won-lost record and a 2.65 earned-run average. After Shaw, though, Schoendienst may have to go to Moe Drabowsky. the 36-year-old stockbroker, and 35-year-old Stan Williams, both now with their sixth team.

The 34-year-old Mellor has had countless injuries from falls, After scoring his 1,000th victory in December at Nottingham, England, Mellor took another fall and had to undergo surgery on one of his legs. But he's back riding, and has won 62 races this season.

The big argument in its favor was that public politics would be so dull that nobody would The other big argument was that nobody could possibly get rich from a public-politics system.

In commercial politics, companies with lots of money ("Moolah." to use the old Yale euphemism; shop around for a candidate or a political party whom they can sponsor. Very few sponsors, of course.

will put money into a party or a candidate without receiving some advance idea of what they will get for their moolah.

For this purpose, most candidates and both major parties prepare what are called "pilots." These are carefully produced dramatizations which give the potential sponsor the flavor of the campaign or government which he will be investing in.

International Telephone & Telegraph, for example, probably didn't pledge a cent of its money for the Republican National Convention until its representatives saw a "pilot" of the performance. It is rumored, in fact, that they were so exhausted by the 64 hours of unabated oratorical praise for President Nixon which the "pilot" required them to sit mercial politics were not such a through, that their first inclinaelection in New York. What may have prompted them to change their minds is not known. Perhaps they were shown a "post-election pilot." This is a widely used device in which the candidate gives the reluctant sponsor a glimpse of what life will be like after he,

the candidate, has been elected. If the sponsor is, like ITT, a conglomerate with anti-trust problems, it might show several of the conglomerate's executives attending a wienie roast and pitching horseshoes with lawyers from the Justice Department's Anti-Trust Division

Democratic candidates, who are just as dependent as Republicans on the sponsorship of oil corporations, have for years been showing oil men a "post-election pilot" in which the entire Senate Finance Committee votes unanimously to compel all widows and orphans to pay higher taxes on their stock dividends so that the Treasury can raise enough money to give higher tax refunds to oil men.

Many persons, of course, would like to spensor a candidate or political party so that the Senate Finance Committee and the Justice Department might also feel well disposed toward them. Naturally, because of the vast sums of money required. very few individuals can afford to buy into the system.

This is a fortunate circumstance for the government, for if just anybody at all could afford to be a sponsor, it would be very difficult for the government to do some of its favorite things. Imagine, by way of example, what might have happened if Father Philip Berrigan, the militant anti-war activist now on trial in Federal Court, had had the moolah to sponsor a big piece of the Republican National Convention. Would the case have been settled out of court, at a wienie roast perhaps, with some of the fellows from the In some of the fellows from the In-

Engineering a Georgian Masterpiece

By Bernard D. Nossiter BATH, England (WP).—This city council's go-ahead businessmen and the town planner want to build a tunnel and four-lane thoroughfare through the center of Bath, a Georgian masterpiece in tawny, golden stone.

The plan to divide the town physically has torn it apart politically. Many of the long-established residents are indifferent to Bath's architectural splendors and welcome the proposed street as a lure for industry and a relief from petty traffic But a determined band of newcomers, drawn to Bath by its superb 18thcentury terraces and chaste, neoclassical facades, has mounted a belated campaign to divert the rivers of concrete.

The traffic engineers would not knock down Bath's most notable, individual glories-the great, sweeping row of houses of the Paragon, the handsome array around the Circus and Royal Crescent. That's the point of the tunnel, to carry traffic some 600 yards under these special glories. But the plan does call for knocking down several dozen lesser Georgian houses at each end of the hole.

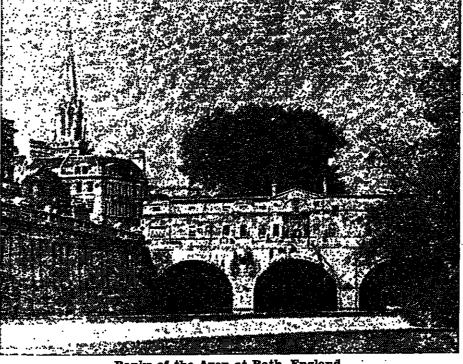

The town took its name from the ancient Roman baths that have been restored. It became a fashionable royal playground in the 18th century and attracted urban architect-planners who turned it into a living jewel. Bath is no longer fashionable, but visitors with a taste for superb townscape keep coming back.

The main road from London to Bristol, 13 miles farther west, now wanders through the heart of Bath and this is one of the difficulties. Trucks and cars rumble past the Paragon and through charming Queen Square. During rush hours and the tourist summer season, the traffic is a nuisance and its fumes and vibrations are eroding the 18th-century charm.

Those enchanted with Bath might conclude that the answer is a new road, bypassing the city, and other measures such as a better bus system to cut down car traffic in town. But that is not the way of traffic engineers. One of the most prestigious, Sir Colin Buchanan, was hired by the city council to make a study and he came up with the tunnel idea in 1965. His 96-page report is eloquent on the subject of Bath's beauty, says lots about the tunnel but is notably discreet about what goes at either end of it, the chief source of the objections. Sir Colin assumes explicitly that car traffic can't be reduced. He asserts that a bypass road would cost too much and would spoil the surrounding green hills. As far as can be determined, there has never been an analysis of what a bypass would cost

The council and the city planner, Howard

Banks of the Avon at Bath, England.

Stutchbury, went Sir Colin a few better. They ignored his plea to spare the banks of the Avon and plotted the east leg of their four-lane thoroughfare smack along the river's north bank. They tossed in several multi-level traffic circles, an elevated highway at the tunnel's west end and the tunnel exit in the park.

In his office hard by Bath's sturdy Gothic, 16th-century abbey, Mr. Stutchbury said: "This is a problem in traffic engineering."

He acknowledged that one aim is to draw industry.

Bath's newcomers woke up to what was in store with the publication of the council-Stutchbury plan last summer. At one end of the social scale, people of means and taste have organized the Bath Environment Campaign to stop the project. Its chairman is Pamela Lock, an eloquent and vigorous Australian who lives with her husband, a senior BOAC pilot, in a splendidly restored house on Lansdown Crescent.

"Bath is a total environment," she says. "You can't divide the town up into a 'heritage' area and the rest." At the other end of the social ladder, a group of bohemians have organized their own Bath Action Group to block the plan. This crowd is led by Shirley Gwilliam, who fled London with her two children three years ago to open a musical instruments shop here.

Miss Gwilliam owns a tiny Georgian house in rundown Chatham Row, directly in the path of buildozers that will clear ground for the tunnel's east entrance. "We do have traffic problems," she says, "So does every community. But we can solve them without a motorway."

The council itself is split along party lines: Conservatives and Liberals are for the project and Laborites are against. It carried by just two votes in a 50-man body. There are murmurings that not all the proponents are entirely disinterested.

The last word will not rest with the city fathers but with London. To build the project-its cost is still not published but one estimate puts it at $100 million—Bath seeks a 75 percent subsidy from the central government's department of environment.

That agency is expected to hold a hearing in July. Its decision will determine whether Bath is blessed with a fourlane throughway through its heart or whether it will remain a living example of inspired taste from the Age of Reason,
